Patsy Hadicke Obituary

Born November 9, 1934 in Williams, Oklahoma, Patsy Ann Brown was the fifth of six children born to Clarence Robert Brown, a Baptist preacher, and Ollie Alice (Guthrie) Brown. When Patsy was just an infant, the Brown family moved to Texas where her father would preach in various towns and communities. Ultimately, it would be in Bonham, Texas where Patsy would attend high school and play basketball - a game she grew to love while watching her older sister, Marie, play through the years. Patsy managed to skip grades and graduated from high school as valedictorian of her class at the tender age of 16. Blessed to find true love, it was while living in Ponca City, Oklahoma that Patsy met Roger Hadicke. This when Roger, the owner of an insurance agency, and Patsy or "Tricia" as she was known through her radio program, "Time Out with Tricia" partnered together for a community event. Once Roger laid eyes on Tricia and especially as he began to know her, he was completely smitten. The two married, in Ponca City, on June 13, 1970 and would make their home in various communities and states as Roger's career took off. One of Tricia's favorite places to live was in Cabot, Arkansas, where she won five consecutive Ladies Golf Club Championships. It was early on in their relationship that Tricia decided she wanted to try to learn to play the game of golf. Following her first trip to the driving range, she went ahead and invested in lessons. The two often joked that they got a two for one deal, as Tricia would pass along to Roger everything she learned at each lesson. Through the years, Tricia and Roger played lots of golf together with family, friends and some of Roger's colleagues who took it pretty hard when Tricia beat them! She also didn't let many people forget about the hole-in-one she got! A woman of determination, if she thought it - Tricia was sure to accomplish it. She enjoyed playing golf, bridge, reading, singing, watching college football and managing Roger. Exuding true beauty and grace, both physically and spiritually,
